Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137 (1803), was a U.S. Supreme Court case that established the principle of judicial review in the United States, meaning that American courts have the power to strike down laws, statutes, and some government actions that contravene the U.S. Constitution. Case Summary of Marbury v. Madison. Madison failed to finalize the former president's appointment of William Marbury as Justice of the Peace. Facts. In the final days of John Adams' presidency he appointed a multitude of justices of the peace under the "Organic Act" deliberately because the oncoming President Thomas Jefferson would not.
