Social analysis is a common feature of modern literary criticism. The social context and antecedent of authors and their fiction works are invariably examined in order to shed light on the characters and events depicted in the stories. Pride and Prejudice is the most famous of Jane Austen's novels, and its opening is one of the most famous lines in English literature – "It is a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune, must be in want of a wife." "It is a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune, must be in want of a wife." This first line has become one of the most famous in English literature. Pride and Prejudice revolves around love and marriage in an acquisitive society. While the Bennets are members of the leisure class, the family fortune is entailed upon a male heir.
